PLACEMAKING AND CREATIVE PLACEMAKING

“In creative placemaking, partners from public, private, nonprofit, and community sectors strategically shape the physical and social character of a neighborhood, town, tribe, city, or region around arts and cultural activities. Creative placemaking animates public and private spaces, rejuvenates structures and streetscapes, improves local business viability and public safety, and brings diverse people together to celebrate, inspire, and be inspired” – Anne Markusen and Ann Gadwa, Creative Placemaking, white paper commissioned by the National Endowment of the Arts, 2010

TEN BEST PRACTICES FOR SUCCESSFUL CREATIVE PLACEMAKING

▪ Begin with the end in mind
▪ Bring artists and the community upfront
▪ Mine local art and cultural assets
▪ Engage local artists
▪ Understand and articulate stakeholder benefits
▪ Form cross sector partnerships
▪ Identify critical skills to deliver
▪ Look for early wins
▪ Maintain a long view
▪ Explore creative financing
New York City’s Sugar Hill Children’s Museum in Harlem, NYC broke with convention by placing a children’s art museum in an affordable housing complex.
#1: BEGIN WITH THE END IN MIND (CONT’D)

“The entire Sugar Hill Project was conceived as a creative placemaking initiative, with the Sugar Hill Children’s Museum of Art & Storytelling as its cultural capstone.

Broadway Housing Communities (BHC) developed and operates this innovative community revitalization initiative guided by our understanding that integrating housing with education and the arts will have the greatest impact in an underserved community”.

--Melissa Benson, Director of Development & Communications, BHC
#2: BRING IN ARTISTS AND THE COMMUNITY EARLY

ArtPlace America awarded six organizations $3 million each to demonstrate the impact of early engagement of arts and culture in community development.
After asset mapping revealed Mill Hill residents in Macon, GA like to cook, its community arts center, to be housed in a historic mill auditorium after renovation, will include a culinary arts school.
#4: ENGAGE LOCAL ARTISTS

- Find and recruit artists in the local community

- Potential Resources:
  - State and Local Art Councils
  - Local Nonprofit Arts Organizations

  For example, in Washington, DC, resources include:
  - DC Commission for Arts and Humanities
  - Washington Project for the Arts
  - CulturalDC
Steelstacks in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, draws 800,000 visitors and contributes $48 million annually to the local economy.
For example, the Mill Hill Arts project had a variety of local, state, and federal partners, including:

- The Macon Arts Alliance
- The Urban Development Authority
- Macon-Bibb County
- Local Hospitals
- The White House Strong Cities Strong Communities initiative
- National Endowment for the Arts (NEA)
- The Knight Foundation
- and others
#7: IDENTIFY THE CRITICAL SKILLS NEEDED TO DELIVER ON PROJECT GOALS AND OUTCOMES

- Collaboration and teamwork is key
- What skills are required on the project to be a winning team?
The Hall, a pop-up culinary art project in Tenderloin, San Francisco, provides stalls for six food vendors, a bar, and free meeting space for local nonprofit groups, while the developer awaits entitlement, and community buy-in grows.
#9: MAINTAIN A LONG VIEW

Monroe Street Market, a $250M Mixed-Use TOD project in NE Washington, DC, hired nonprofits to keep the artists engaged and the Arts Walk programmed and active.
#10: PURSUE CREATIVE FINANCING

Bethlehem Steelstacks was partially funded from casino revenues.

Sugar Hill Development pieced funding together from 13 sources.
A FEW TAKEAWAYS

Creative placemaking strategies have been used successfully across many dimensions in the built environment, housing and public spaces as demonstrated here, and it also can be applied to transportation, health, infrastructure, and environmental systems.

All stakeholders stand to benefit—community residents and businesses, government, developers, and other partners.

When properly applied, creative placemaking strategies can help differentiate a real estate development project, while simultaneously addressing social, economic, environmental, and other challenges.

Using best practices has proven to differentiate the most successful projects, and has helped revitalize and foster healthy, sustainable communities.
THANK YOU!
