The ULI/Randall Lewis Health Mentorship Program will allow students to learn about ULI, develop relationships with ULI members, and deepen their understanding of opportunities to advance health via the built environment.

Who should apply?
This opportunity is open to current graduate students who are:

- enrolled in an accredited graduate program in real estate, architecture, urban planning, or a related field during the 2018-2019 academic year (full or part time)
- passionate about improving health and equity through land use and the built environment and driven to address this in their future careers
- interested in learning and networking opportunities provided by ULI

What does the program entail?
Selected student mentees will be granted the following opportunities:

- Complimentary registration and travel support to:
  - ULI's 2018 Fall Meeting in Boston (October 8-11) & 2019 Spring Meeting in Nashville (April 16-18)
  - The Building Healthy Places Interest Forum at both meetings
  - One Product Council meeting at both meetings, if applicable
- Support for professional development:
  - A $1000 merit award
  - Mentorship from a ULI member
  - Connection to mentorship program alumni
  - Publication of their photos, short biographies and written reflections on the ULI website

Apply today: uli.org/healthmentors (applications are due June 15, 2018)
Learn more about ULI’s Building Healthy Places Initiative: uli.org/health

Questions? Email health@uli.org